CORPORATE GOVERNANCE / 01 OF 08

Corporate Governance & Leadership Responsibilities

Clear authority, responsible oversight, and accountable execution

LEGAL ENTITY	TerraHash Energy LLC | California, United States

This document explains the governance and leadership responsibilities used to organize the U.S. activities of TerraHash Energy LLC. It distinguishes legal management authority from executive responsibilities and advisory participation.

01 Corporate identity and governing framework

1.1 TerraHash Energy LLC (the "Company") is a California limited liability company. The Company conducts its U.S. business through its own legal entity and maintains a clear distinction between that entity and any shareholder, affiliate, associated brand, or predecessor business in another jurisdiction.

1.2 The Company's Articles of Organization, Operating Agreement, applicable California law, and valid Company actions govern legal powers and internal decision-making. Business descriptions, website biographies, and functional job titles do not amend those instruments or independently create authority to act for the Company.

1.3 The Company separates strategic oversight, day-to-day management, financial approvals, and advisory input so that responsibility for each material decision can be identified and documented.

02 Ownership and management responsibilities

2.1 Members hold membership interests and exercise rights allocated by the Operating Agreement and applicable law. Membership interests are not characterized as publicly traded corporate shares, and an ownership relationship does not by itself establish day-to-day operational authority.

2.2 Management authority rests with the persons legally empowered under the Company's governing instruments. The Company records the scope of that authority, including reserved decisions, approval rights, and permitted delegations.

2.3 Executive leadership is responsible for implementing approved strategy, leading assigned functions, managing budgets within authorized limits, supervising personnel, safeguarding information, and reporting material operating and financial matters through established channels.

03 Leadership functions and operating accountability

3.1 The Chief Executive Officer provides overall executive coordination, sets management priorities within authorized strategic direction, and oversees cross-functional execution. The CEO acts within the authority granted by the Company and its governing documents.

3.2 Functional executives are accountable for their respective areas, which may include operations, development, finance, technology, commercial relationships, people, risk, and communications. Job descriptions and written delegations specify the applicable responsibilities, reporting lines, and limits of expenditure or commitment.

3.3 Material decisions are documented at an appropriate level of detail. Individuals may not represent a decision as approved, a project as funded, or an obligation as binding until the required corporate and commercial approvals are in place.

04 Oversight, advisers, and use of titles

4.1 Where a governance or oversight body is authorized under the Company's governing instruments, its powers, composition, procedures, and reporting lines are determined by the applicable written authorization. A similar title or committee within an affiliate does not create an equivalent body for the Company.

4.2 Advisers contribute specialized experience and recommendations but do not possess management, voting, banking, or contracting authority merely by virtue of an advisory designation. Engagement terms and express written authorization control any additional responsibilities.

4.3 The Company presents names and roles externally only where they are supported by current appointment records and are accurately associated with the proper legal entity.

05 Integrity, records, and accountability

5.1 Decision-makers disclose material actual or potential conflicts of interest and refrain from approving matters in which their independence is impaired, consistent with the Company's applicable procedures and governing obligations.

5.2 The Company maintains organized records of appointments, delegations, material approvals, company-level decisions, and changes in leadership authority. Access to these records is limited according to legitimate business needs and confidentiality requirements.

5.3 This governance framework complements, but does not replace, the Company's executed formation records, Operating Agreement, employment agreements, written delegations, or other controlling legal instruments.

TERRAHASH ENERGY LLC