CORPORATE GOVERNANCE / 03 OF 08

Executive Compensation & Incentive Governance Policy

Consistent compensation decisions and transparent executive arrangements

LEGAL ENTITY	TerraHash Energy LLC | California, United States

This policy establishes a professional approach to evaluating executive compensation, performance incentives, long-term awards, and related approvals while protecting the Company's financial and governance interests.

01 Compensation principles

1.1 Executive compensation is designed to reflect the responsibilities of the position, market context, relevant experience, expected contribution, financial sustainability, and the Company's business objectives.

1.2 Compensation proposals are evaluated on their total cost and commercial implications, including base salary, incentives, benefits, reimbursements, severance terms, and any proposed long-term award.

1.3 Compensation communications distinguish an approved contractual obligation from a planning assumption, preliminary discussion, or illustrative valuation.

02 Salary, benefits, and expense reimbursement

2.1 Base compensation and material benefits are documented in an executed employment or service agreement or other valid written authorization. Changes to material terms follow the required approval process and applicable employment law.

2.2 Company expenses must relate to legitimate business activity, comply with established reimbursement practices, and be supported by adequate records. Personal expenses are not presented as corporate expenditures.

2.3 Any signing payment, retention arrangement, termination payment, or change-of-control benefit is evaluated in light of contractual obligations, cost, performance considerations, and required approvals.

03 Performance and incentive arrangements

3.1 Performance-linked compensation is based on clearly communicated objectives appropriate to the executive's role. Objectives may address operational safety, project execution, revenue quality, cost discipline, customer delivery, capital stewardship, governance, and team development.

3.2 Incentive criteria and measurement periods are set out in governing written terms. The Company does not imply that discretionary compensation is earned, payable, or guaranteed in the absence of the applicable approval and contractual conditions.

3.3 Evaluation considers both outcomes and the manner in which those outcomes are achieved; misleading reporting, unmanaged risk-taking, or disregard for controls is inconsistent with responsible performance.

04 Equity and other long-term incentives

4.1 Equity interests, restricted stock units, phantom awards, profit interests, and other long-term incentives are legally and economically different arrangements. No award is described as issued or vested unless the appropriate plan, award documentation, authorization, and legal requirements support that characterization.

4.2 Any long-term incentive communication explains the award type, grant conditions, vesting, forfeiture provisions, transfer restrictions, tax considerations, and the extent to which liquidity may or may not be available, as applicable.

4.3 An indicative enterprise valuation, proposed percentage, or hypothetical exit value is not presented as a guaranteed economic outcome. The Company does not promise a public listing, repurchase, redemption, or liquidity event except as expressly set out in a binding authorized agreement.

05 Independent review and documentation

5.1 An executive does not exercise sole approval authority over that executive's own compensation or material changes to personal financial benefits. Conflicts are disclosed and handled through the appropriate authorized decision-making process.

5.2 The Company retains the relevant written approvals, agreements, plan instruments, and amendments and restricts disclosure of sensitive compensation information to authorized purposes.

5.3 This policy operates alongside the Company's binding contractual arrangements and applicable law; it does not alter a signed agreement or create an incentive award by itself.

TERRAHASH ENERGY LLC